

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.

Austin, Texas
April 3, 1923

Hon. S. L. Staples,
Secretary of State,
Capitol Building,
Austin, Texas.

11/300

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I am filing, together with my veto, Senate Bill No.300.

The object of this bill is to provide a new and additional manner in which notice may be given by a party to a proceeding before boards, and other quasi-judicial agencies of the State, that said party will not abide by, and intends to appeal from the decision of said board or commission.

If this bill should become a law, we would then have several different ways of giving notice of appeal from the rulings of said boards. It would necessarily be confusing. I am unable to discover, on investigation, any real necessity for this bill. It seems to me there should be only one course to be pursued in proceedings of this kind, and that should be clearly defined by law.

This bill is accordingly vetoed.

Respectfully,

Governor.
